CHAPTER 1

The Rainy Day

It had been raining all morning. The drops drummed against the windowpanes, ran down in little streams and gathered on the windowsill.

Julian sat on the living room carpet. Building blocks lay in front of him. Lots of building blocks. But today, building wasn't any fun.

“I'm bored,” Julian sighed. His mother smiled. “Then go and find yourself an adventure.”

Julian laughed. “Where?” “Sometimes you find adventures where you least expect them.”

Julian had no idea then how right she was.

CHAPTER 2

The Strange Noise

In the afternoon, the rain grew heavier. Julian was playing with his toy car when he suddenly heard a noise. Knock. He looked up. Silence.

Knock. Knock. Julian frowned. The sound was coming from upstairs. From the attic. No one ever really went up there. There were only old cardboard boxes. Christmas decorations. Old books.

Forgotten things. But now something was knocking up there. Julian stood up. Very slowly.

A little tingle fluttered through his tummy. Not fear. More like curiosity.
